Kiss Through the Glass

In a touching story, a Chinese nurse and her boyfriend planned to get married on February 14, but the sudden outbreak of the coronavirus in Wuhan destroyed their plans.

www.englishtreasure.asia

On the first day of the new lunar year, she and five colleagues at the hospital received urgent notice about the virus and began long, exhausting days of stressfully fighting the epidemic. Images have found their way into the public gaze of doctors struggling to nap because of the overload of work, unable to eat, not daring to use the toilet, and having to wear biohazard suits all day.

youtube.com/EnglishTreasure

"Your eyes are dark, you're getting thinner. Are you only 40 kilos now?" her boyfriend asked through the glass separating the healthy from the sick. This was the first time they had seen each other in eleven days, but they could not touch, only kiss the glass between them. Before parting, the boy gave the girl a promise: "When the epidemic is over, I will wait for you to get out of the hospital, and the first thing we will do is get married!"

www.englishtreasure.asia

What disrupted the couple's marriage plans?

youtube.com/EnglishTreasure

What struggles do the doctors face in the hospital?

When will the couple get married?